

MSU Excellence-in-Teaching Citation

Nicholas David Bowman

Department of Communication, College of Communication Arts and Sciences

Nick Bowman is very dedicated to his students. He commits himself fully to each of his classes, helping them connect with course material, each other, and the real world. Mr. Bowman holds his students to the highest of standards, and makes use of a wide variety of instructional techniques to ensure that each of his students has a deep understanding of course material. He is an engaging and inspiring instructor, and has been described by his students as “committed”, “connected”, and “caring”.

In the Department of Communication, Mr. Bowman has been responsible for organizing and promoting the annual Bowling for Scholar’s colloquia series for the past four years. This event brings together past, present, and future Communication researchers with special ties to MSU. Beyond his service to the Department of Communication, Mr. Bowman has served as an advisor to several student groups, including the MSU Club Dance Team and the MSU chapter of Sigma Pi Fraternity.

Beyond his teaching and service, Mr. Bowman is an accomplished researcher. He has over 25 conference papers and presentations to his name, and has been an author on several academic journal publications and book chapters. His research has focused primarily on the psychology of media entertainment, and he has received several internal grants and fellowships that have helped him to pursue his research interests.

Mr. Bowman has made a lasting impression at MSU. His dedication to teaching, service, and research place him among the very best graduate students at this university. MSU is proud to award Nicholas David Bowman the Excellence-in-Teaching Citation.
